I am an undergraduate student of Department of Political Science – Defence Studies at University of Ljubljana, Slovenia. After my 7 months student exchange in Istanbul, Turkey, I am currently working on my thesis paper about IDPs in BiH. Living and understanding the post-conflict situation and reconciliation process in one of the countries affected by war and with difficult social and political conditions will be a good added value to my studies. While doing internship in CESI I will get close insight to one of the aspects of post-conflict situations, notably IDPs and refugees. With fieldwork, collecting testimonies and critical approach on IDPs issues I would try to examine the difference between field situation and situation described by national and international actors. I am focused on educational issues concerning IDPs and access to one of their basic human rights and why they are not able to have quality and adequate education. With research and critical approach I examine role and actions of international and national actors on the other hand with fieldwork and personal access to IDPs I learn about the situation on the ground.
